Blog

The screenshot shows a Blogger interface for a blog post titled "Knowledge and its types". The post content includes:

- Knowledge and its types (Main title)
- Meaning of Knowledge (Section header)
 - Knowledge is a familiarity, awareness or understanding of someone, such as facts, information, descriptions, which is acquired through experience or education by perceiving, discovering, or learning. It can refer to a theoretical, practical understanding of a subject.
 - Plato, the Greek Philosopher defined knowledge as "justified true belief" though "well-adjusted true belief" is more complete. Knowledge acquisition involves complex cognitive processes like perception, communication and reasoning while knowledge is said to be related to the capacity of acknowledgement in human beings.
 - In other words, 'Knowledge acquisition is a process whereas 'Knowledge' is the product resulting from 'Knowledge acquisition'
- Three conceptions of Knowledge in Epistemology (Section header)
 - Knowledge for Practice - Though we may acquire knowledge from various sources using different methods, true knowledge is the one that finds use in our daily life. In other words, we can say that
